Pain Reprocessing Therapy at Boulder Community Health

Boulder Community Health's (BCH) Center for Mind Body Medicine (CMBM) provides Pain Reprocessing Therapy (PRT) for chronic primary pain that cannot be explained by active structural tissue damage or diseases such as cancer/tumor, infection, fracture/sprain, neurological/nerve damage or autoimmune disorders. Chronic primary pain can originate with one of these issues after someone has completed medical treatment/intervention, but the pain persists at least three months past the normal recovery phase.

PRT at CMBM is an integrative health approach to chronic pain. The CMBM team works collaboratively with various medical providers to support patients in recovery. PRT is not a stand-alone alternative treatment for active structural tissue damage or issues related to substance abuse/dependency or severe/persistent mental illness.

The PRT therapist does not prescribe medication to any patients. A patient experiencing any of the above concerns should not be referred for PRT and instead referred to the most medically appropriate treatment.

For questions about PRT or this referral process, please call 303-415-8650. Fax completed referral forms to 303-415-8608.

Referred patients should call 303-415-8650 to schedule a 30-minute consultation. PRT services will commence once the referral form is received.
